Palazzo Verrazzano is a prestigious building designed with low energy consumption requirements higher than those required by the European Community, which is a point of reference for NZEB architecture (Nearly Zero Energy Building). This means that the building and thermo-acoustic components and the heating/cooling system were conceived and built in parallel, thus allowing an optimization that allows for significant savings in terms of energy consumption and pollution.

Built with the most modern and efficient thermal and acoustic insulation techniques, Palazzo Verazzano allows its inhabitants both total well-being and maximum levels of environmental comfort and privacy. The small hanging gardens are designed to filter light, rebalancing the relationship between nature and construction. The balconies have folding solar greenhouses with glass panels. The brise-soleil, sunshades, on the facades protect and control radiation. Sensory comfort is enhanced by a floor air conditioning system with a heat pump that creates an optimal atmosphere, without cold or hot areas. Each individual home has an ATU (air handling unit) that in addition to dehumidifying it, filters the air, purifying it with a UV lamp. The building is free of architectural barriers. Photovoltaic panels meet the energy needs of the common areas.

Possibility of deduction of the Earthquake Bonus: €48,000.00.00 in ten years.

Land registry updates possibly in progress. Therefore, all the data reported above do not constitute contractual elements or prerequisites.
