Palazzo Verrazzano is a prestigious building designed with low energy consumption requirements higher than those required by the European Community, which is a point of reference for NZEB architecture (Nearly Zero Energy Building). This means that the building and thermo-acoustic components and the heating/cooling system were conceived and built in parallel, thus allowing an optimization that allows for significant savings in terms of energy consumption and pollution.

Built with the most modern and efficient thermal and acoustic insulation techniques, Palazzo Verazzano allows its inhabitants both total well-being and maximum levels of environmental comfort and privacy. The small hanging gardens are designed to filter light, rebalancing the relationship between nature and construction. The balconies have folding solar greenhouses with glass panels. The
